

Reunión Científica: Economic Challenges for Energy. 6º Workshop Anual de Economics for Energy

Madrid, 28 y 29 de enero de 2016

GREGORY NEMET

Gregory Nemet is an associate professor at the University of Wisconsin-Madison in the La Follette School of Public Affairs and the Nelson Institute Center for Sustainability and the Global Environment (SAGE). He is also chair of the Energy Analysis and Policy (EAP) certificate program. His research and teaching focus on improving analysis of the environmental, social, economic, and technical dynamics of the global energy system. This work is motivated by a general interest in understanding how to expand access to energy services while reducing environmental impacts. He teaches courses in policy analysis, energy systems analysis, and international environmental policy.
