

Transición energética en España: ¿Seguidores o Líderes?

Energy transition in Spain: followers or leaders?

Madrid, 11 de septiembre de 2019 / September, 11

BIO

María Sicilia

María Sicilia is the Chief Strategy Officer and a member of the Executive Management Board of ENAGAS, the owner and transmission system operator (TSO) of the Spanish gas network and a leading global gas infrastructure company, listed in the IBEX 35. Thus, she is responsible for the strategic planning of the company and market analysis.

Previously, she has developed an extensive experience in the energy sector in top-level organizations, both in the public and private sectors:

- She was Deputy Director-General for Energy Planning at the Ministry of Industry, Energy and Tourism of the Government of Spain, and a Director of the Board of the Spanish Agency for Renewable Energy and Energy Efficiency (IDAE).
- Prior to that she was the Head of the Prospective Department at Iberdrola Renovables and a member of the governing body of the main renewable industry associations (GWEC, EWEA/WindEurope, REN-21 and Spanish Wind Energy Association).
- She has also developed an important part of her professional career in the international area, specifically at the International Energy Agency (IEA/OECD) where she was the Leading Expert for Electricity Markets and at the UK Office of Gas and Electricity Markets (Ofgem), where she worked as Regulatory Economist.
- Previous positions as a Spanish senior civil servant include adviser to the Secretary of State for Energy at the Ministry of Economy and Energy Counsellor at the Permanent Representation of Spain to the European Union in Brussels.

She is also a member of the Steering Committee of the Spanish Energy Club and of leading international advisory councils of the energy industry such as the IEA Energy Business Council and the IEF Industry Advisory Board.

Mrs. Sicilia is an economist and a lawyer by training, holds an MPA in Economic Policy from the London School of Economics (LSE) and an executive education certificate from the Harvard Business School.